

	This is a mandatory course for the micro major in Language and Communication Disorders. It is a 2-credit course, lasting 16 weeks. The instruction language is English and Chinese. The teaching materials include English textbooks and classic articles in the history of linguistics. The teaching content focuses on the basic theories and methods of linguistics, covering a phonetics, phonology, syntax, semantics, pragmatics, and discourse. Moreover, the course emphasizes the application of basic linguistic knowledge in speech and communication disorders. Diverse classroom activities such as lecturing, article reading and discussion, group discussion and presentation, homework, and rich activities such language experiment demo combined together will make the course interesting, informative and inspiring. This course is primarily designed for students who are new to linguistic theories, guiding them to analyze and interpret various language and language health-related phenomena, and also to understand the essence of linguistics as a scientific discipline.

	Fromkin, V. (2014). An introduction to Language . Wadsworth Cengage Learning. ISBN: 978113331068.						